

TOBIAS PILS

Primordial Flow

„Looked at as a whole, these paintings might not make any sense. The little parts do. They stick to each other. They fit organically without questioning. Like one day gives to the other. There are weeks, there are years. A painting can be a life.

The brush, the paint, the canvas, the paper offer the limitations to realize this. Out of love, dirt, and the willingness to take the chance of destruction, the ideas can vanish. To make space for something primordial.“
