ASSEMBLAGE 6: UNLEARNING

New York, NY (July 6, 2020) – Friedman Benda is pleased to present British artist Faye Toogood's second solo exhibition at the gallery, Assemblage 6: Unlearning, opening September 10, 2020.

Assemblage 6 marks a dramatic rupture in Faye Toogood's creative trajectory, in which she has set out to 'unlearn' the process of design, and build it up again from scratch. This has led her to a conflation of furniture and sculpture, which draws upon the shifting perspectives encountered in childhood fables. The playful qualities of rough-hewn maquettes, broken up by the corrugations of crumpled paper and masking tape, are recast at functional scale – daybeds, chairs and consoles, manufactured in cast bronze, wrought iron and rough canvas.

Taken as a whole, the collection suggests how deceptive first appearances can be. Trompe-l'oeil effects imitate the twisted wires and taped cardboard of the original models, preserving the creative steps that led to their own genesis even as the true materials of their construction are disguised. The designs suggest the aleatory qualities of folk art or found objects – yet every crinkle and crease has been carefully considered and recreated. And though they still evoke a moment of unforced naïveté, in which a shape is first roughed out, their imposing physicality betrays the involvement of numerous skilled hands. Glenn Adamson, Senior Scholar at the Yale Center for British Art, comments, "Faye Toogood's new Assemblage is a tour de force of thinking and making, which hides in plain sight. Through an ingenious set of imitative processes, she and her team have devised a way to do justice to that first, instinctive moment that a form comes into being. There is tremendous energy in this moment, and each work in the Assemblage is in effect a monument to that quality of instantaneous creativity."
