Reflecting on a career spanning six decades, 'A Confession of My Sins' brings together over 50 new paintings and works on paper created by Georg Baselitz over the past year.

Taking over the entire Bermondsey gallery, the exhibition features large-scale canvases measuring over 3m x 5m. Made horizontally on the studio floor, each painting records the 86-year-old artist's movements, including trails left by his walking frame and the trolley holding his paint.

The new works build on formal and personal references accumulated over Baselitz's life; he draws on childhood memories of his native Deutschbaselitz, a village in Saxony, as well as depicting himself alongside his wife Elke.
