

Pool (Fold) is a series of eight handmade paper forms. Each is made in the shape of a conventional swimming pool design, folded to a 'seven-fold' limit so that it fits into an envelope. Much like a dress pattern or packaging material, Pool (Fold) offers volume where there is none. While swimming pools exist to contain bodies of water, paper is understood as a passive surface for holding images or text.

Rant is a series of five silkscreen prints. Each is an outburst of text set in bold, black sans-serif type. Functioning as both provocation and resistance at the expense of logic and coherence, Rant treats language as something volatile, excessive and unstable. Set into columns of varying length and tone, Rant gives physical permanence to fleeting thought.

If Pool (Fold) suggests containment, Rant pushes against this possibility.