(TODAY)

A title that refers to time. A time, somewhere between the past and future, indefinite. On the other hand, today is also a specific time, the time of now, the moment where we are immediately present.

The exhibition goes in search of the blind spot that the past and future strike in the present. The now is short, fleeting, and repeats itself again and again, without end. (Endlessly can be read on a canvas.)

Each painting shows its particular history in an accumulation of images: the artwork not as a synthesis of a world but as a now through which its past emerges.
