

Sonia Gomes
"Lines in Wefts"
Opening: April 9th, 2016

Mendes Wood DM has the pleasure of announcing Lines in wefts, the third exhibition of Sonia Gomes's work at the São Paulo gallery. Gomes made a name for herself in recent years for work in which the interplay of found or donated objects transforms them into sculptures. After several decades working in Belo Horizonte, Sonia Gomes recently participated in such important international exhibitions as Revolution in the Making: Abstract Sculpture by Women, 1947 – 2016 at Hauser Wirth Schimmel, the 56th Venice Biennale, 2015 and No Man's Land at the Rubell Family Collection.

In Lines in wefts, Sonia Gomes revisits the gallery with an exhibition in which the main piece Weaving the Morning I, II, III is structured in three nightgowns that were donated by a friend, who, after the decision to sell the family home, was permitted by the matriarch to give away her old bridal garments. Despite the matriarch's humble origins (the story goes that she's the daughter of a bricklayer), the garments are sophisticated, with pieces of hand-embroidered linens. Kept in storage for many years, these pieces came to Sonia already imbued with personal history. Any attempt at intervention requires the artist to be forever mindful from a point of view of extreme respect for the pieces, for the secrets they contain, for the time that has passed and is now gone forever, but which in their time were symbolic of a woman's rite of passage. This is how the aesthetic experience in Sonia Gomes's work begins.

The nightgowns were transformed into canvases for delicate drawings made of lines, pins, embroidery, and so on. Suspended from the gallery ceiling by kite strings, the nightgowns gain autonomy in the space, parading their colors; like canvases they put forth the artist's drawings, which require the existence of the other, a second place where she, the artist, can weave her expression. Always concerned with the movement of the fabrics, in order to finalize the work, she has also made it necessary to maintain the instability of the original piece; the nightgowns are not attached to a rigid structure. The process is governed by the artist's intuition, by her assiduous concern with the elevation not only the material in this case silk but also the object which has leant itself as medium. A way of breathing new life into something which seemed asleep.

Weaving the Morning

João Cabral de Melo Neto

One rooster does not weave a morning,
he will always need the other roosters, one to pick up the shout that he and toss it to another, another rooster to pick up the shout that a rooster before him and toss it to another, and other roosters with many other roosters to criss-cross the sun-threads of their rooster-shouts
so that the morning, starting from a frail cobweb, may go on being woven, among all the roosters.

And growing larger, becoming a cloth, pitching itself a tent where they all may enter,
inter-unfurling itself for them all, in the tent
(the morning) which soars free of ties and ropes –
the morning, tent of a weave so light that, woven, it lifts itself through itself: balloon light.

In: João Cabral de Melo Neto in Twentieth-Century Latin American Poetry, trans. Galway Kinnell. ed. Stephen Tapscott, Texas, 1996.

Sonia Gomes (1948, Caetanópolis, Minas Gerais) lives and works in Belo Horizonte. Her solo exhibitions include: "Histórias/Histórias: Arte Contemporânea do Brasil", USF Museum of Contemporary Art, Flórida (2016); "No Man's Land: Women Artists from the Rubell Family Collection", Rubell Family Collection, Miami (2015/2016); "All the World's Futures", 56 Biennale di Venezia, Veneza (2015), "The Hand New afro-brasileira", Museu Afro Brasil, São Paulo (2013); "Art & Têxteis", Kunstmuseum Wolfsburg, Wolfsburg (2013).

Mendes
Wood
DM

Rua da Consolação 3358
Jardins São Paulo
SP 01416 – 000 Brasil
+ 55 11 3081 1735
mendeswooddm.com

Mendes Wood DM apresenta nova série de Sonia Gomes

A mostra “Linhas em Tramas” reúne três camisolas revisitadas pela artista em instalações e esculturas singulares em sua carreira

A Mendes Wood DM abre o seu segundo ciclo de exposições no sábado (09) com “Linhas em tramas”, a terceira exposição de Sonia Gomes. A artista mineira se notabilizou nos últimos anos por um trabalho em que a trama de objetos encontrados ou doados se transformam em esculturas por meio de um senso estético aguçado e sob alta influência do desenho.

Na série Linhas em tramas, Sonia Gomes revisita a galeria com uma exposição onde a principal obra Tecendo a Manhã I, II, III é estruturada em três camisolas doadas por um amigo, que após decidirem vender a casa da família, a matriarca autorizou que lhe entregassem várias peças do seu antigo enxoval. Apesar da origem humilde da matriarca, conta-se que é filha de pedreiros, o enxoval é sofisticado com peças de linho bordados a mão.

As camisolas foram transformadas em suporte para os desenhos feitos de linhas, alfinetes e bordados. Suspensos no teto da galeria, por meio de fios para empinar pipas, as camisolas ganham autonomia no espaço; como telas, elas apresentam os desenhos da artista, que para existirem, pedem a existência de um outro, um segundo lugar onde ela, a artista, pode tecer a sua expressão. Sempre preocupada com o movimento dos tecidos, para finalizar a obra ainda se faz necessário manter a instabilidade da peça original, as camisolas não se armam numa estrutura rígida.

A mostra fica aberta ao público até o dia 21/05, das 10h às 19h, acompanhando mais duas exposições individuais, do artista sul-africano Haroon Gunn-Salie e do norte-americano James Lee Byars.